Hospitality, Beauty and Comfort

Many changes have taken place in Carmel's old landmark, Pine Inn.

The name is changed, but the spirit of its best days has been retained in the new name, "Old Lantern Inn"—for it is to be a new landmark on which the lantern of hospitality will shine as in the olden golden days of Carmel.

Sanford C. Rich, the new manager, is a fine musician and artist. He is modernizing the comforts necessary to the traveler of today, while accentuating the atmosphere of that which has made Carmel's fame—the spirit of Art and Artists.

All rooms are to have baths, groups of casement windows to bring in the beauty of out-of-doors; quaint cheery cretonnes in the bedrooms, color and comfort in the ivory-white lobby. A billiard room on the main floor, done in Chinese gold, and two large fireplaces, one at either end of the lobby, before which in comfortable chairs you may sit and drink your demi-tasse following one of Katto's fine dinners.

Mr. Rich has turned all the hard work of renovating the hotel into fun by gathering about him a group of interesting young friends.

There's Hobert Glassett (Don Juan), a former lieutenant in the Chilean navy; there's our own Phil Whiting; there's the singer, Vasia Anikeeff; there's G. W. McLean (The Tortoise), an engineer. And there's Mrs. Harmon, copartner with Mr. Rich, who knows all about ways and means and still remains serene and charming. There's someone else who moves about the lobby looking like a lovely bit of Dresden china; she encourages the boys-in-smocks, approves of all they do, and stimulates them to carry on when hammer strikes thumb instead of nail. Of course, there's an Irishman about—who ever heard of "anything doin'" without a son of Erin being mixed up in it? Tom Mitchell, who used to be with the Orphanum, is there too.

When the work at the Old Lantern Inn is finished drop in of an evening, sit by the blazing log and the workmen-in-smocks by day will become themselves—the artists at night. They'll sing and play for you, tell stories of adventure and romance. Then you'll know that the spirit of old Carmel days has truly returned and awaits you at the sign of Old Lantern.

Forest Theatre Program Summer of 1921

Chantecler, produced by John Northern Hilliard.

A dramatization of an Arabian Nights Tale, written and produced by Perry Newberry.

The program consists of these two plays. The Play Committee and the Board of Directors discussed plans informally at a joint meeting last Friday afternoon and the latter body gave unanimous approval to the committee's choice.

Chantecler, which is Rostand's greatest work, has been given only the Frohmman production in America; and this production was regarded by most critics as inadequate because a woman played the title role. Today it remains one of the most talked about dramas in this country and—so far as audiences are concerned—one of the least known. It has the further recommendation of a universal appeal; the intellectual finds delight in its rare satire and children revel in its wonderful story of the fowls and animals. There is perhaps no more splendid production when it comes to costuming and stage pictures.

The play will require half a hundred people, and the officials of the Forest Theatre have, because of this and the difficulty of evolving costumes, set to work already. In this task of preparation they will need the united help of the community. Mr

Hilliard's tremendous success in staging The Yellow Jacket brings confidence in the local community's ability, under his direction, to put on this truly great play which no amateurs have yet dared even to attempt.

The selection of Mr. Newberry needs no comment. One only has to think back on the dramatizations of Alice in Wonderland and Alladin to realize his capabilities of putting a fairy story into play form. As a producer he has become an integral part of the Forest Theatre; and the fact that he is willing to put in his time on another summer program will be greeted with universal acclaim.

Already the work preliminary to both Chantecler and the children's play has begun. From now on the cooperation of members of the community in making costumes and properties will be asked by those in charge. It is the first time in the Forest Theatre's history that these tasks have been undertaken at so early a date, and the idea should result in doing away with the usual last-minute rush which in other years has sadly hampered producers and actors.

Carmel music lovers will rejoice in the fact that to Thomas Vincent Cator has been assigned the complete charge of the music. He is already working upon a score for the production.
